

Natural Spaces Domes

LIVING IN THE ROUND IS NOT EXACTLY NEW.

Cave dwellers, Kurds, Bedouins, Bees, Medieval Monks, Indians, Eskimos and Zulus, to name a few, have tried it. However it took the Genius of R. Buckminster Fuller. To demonstrate conclusively that for the material used, Domes are the strongest most efficient way to enclose space, brilliantly engineered structures were used in radar Domes on the Arctic Dew line after World War II

THE DOME OWNERS WHO EXPERIENCED DOME LIVING
EVERY DAY OFFER THEIR VIEWS....

There is such an awareness of nature in our dome. It must be all the windows and skylights.

Following the first seasonal shift through all the glass has been a glorious nature lesson. Anticipating the next season is exhilarating.

We never thought that living in a Dome home would be as fun as it is. The kids think it's just great. We don't think we will ever be bored with living here.

Rejuvenating

Surprising

Humanly Elegant

Provocative

Breath Taking

A very personal home

The ultimate energy penny pincher

so much more than just a shelter

Domes have radically changed since the Mid-'60s, when most Dome homes were funky, patched-up symbols of the counterculture. Today's average Dome buyer is rather Middle-American. We're building a basic American housing unit that is a natural and intelligent alternative to expensive and inefficient housing. Dome-homers speak lyrically of the feeling of spaciousness, of an almost mystical airiness induced by living under a skylit canopy.

In a place of time consuming conventional construction, Natural Spaces offers precise factory engineering: solid, interlocking components, pre-cut for faster assembly.

In place of minimally designed structure based on rectangles, our Domes are based on nature's strongest, most efficient shapes - the triangle and the sphere.

In place of vinyl, aluminum and sheetrock, our domes offer all the warmth and natural beauty of wood.

In place of typical, look-alike housing, our Domes offer almost unlimited design flexibility. Unique, exhilarating, never before imagined spaces.

Whether you prefer country-style, rustic or dramatic contemporary design - Whether you start with your plan or our plan - you are personally involved with creating the home of your dreams.
